Bladder leakage will only get worse if you ignore it

A simple, painless, non-invasive and affordable programme

New technology opens the doors to an effective incontinence therapy

While science has improved most medical procedures over the years, treatment for incontinence has remained largely the same for decades. Wave Brilliance therapy uses advanced technology which adds dramatically to the effectiveness of the treatment.

The new NeoControl™ chair creates a therapeutic pulsed magnetic field that produces powerful stimulation to vital muscles that cannot be activated through manual pelvic floor exercises alone.

You remain fully clothed and comfortably seated in a special chair... there's no pain, but you can certainly feel it working.

Treatment courses consist of 16 sessions with patients attending the clinic 2 or 3 times per week. Each session involves 20 minutes of pelvic floor stimulation. A remarkable 3,600 contractions are achieved in one session. While you may feel some minor discomfort as your pelvic floor muscles repeatedly flex and tighten, it is painless.

This is known as the 'core therapy' and for most patients, it should be sufficient. However, we will provide training on manual pelvic floor contractions to help you maintain muscle tone when your therapy programme is completed.

Established Queensland Urologist Dr Geoffrey Buckham attests to the success of this approach

"Having the ability to offer patients this new powerful therapy is a significant breakthrough for the management of such a widespread problem.

Despite emerging success in the United States and 60 other countries, it's still very new to Australia and many doctors are unaware of its benefits. In fact, I would encourage all GP's to become familiar with the significant benefits that this new approach can offer"
